

What Is Families Anonymous?

Families Anonymous™ (FA™) is a Twelve Step, self-help, mutual-support fellowship of people whose lives have been affected by the use of mind-altering substances or related behavioral problems of a relative or friend.

Why Is FA Needed?

Addiction is a disease with dire physical, mental, emotional and spiritual impacts on the people who suffer from it.

And its effects don't stop with just those people. Addiction is, in reality, a family disease, with devastating effects on the relatives and friends who watch in despair as their loved ones are consumed by the disease.

The pain and anguish felt by parents, grandparents, spouses, partners, siblings and others are symptoms of codependency. Codependency is an imbalanced interpersonal relationship in which one person, such as a parent, allows his or her well-being to depend on the well-being of another person, in this case the addicted loved one.

Codependent people often need special help to regain their own lives, find some peace of mind, let go of over-responsibility, and stop making situations worse by enabling other people's self-destructive behaviors. FA provides that special help.

Staying tuned in to their loved ones while not interfering directly in what they do; encouraging and supporting their loved ones' positive choices while not getting caught up in their problems or issues: These are among the critical changes FA members make in themselves as they are attending FA meetings and working the program.

How Does FA Work?

The focus of the FA program is on the family, not on the user (for whom many other recovery programs are available).

FA groups are open to anyone concerned about another person's current, former or suspected use of drugs or alcohol. Groups hold meetings (face-to-face, online, or by phone), usually weekly, in locations throughout the United States and in more than a dozen other countries. No dues or fees are required for membership. Anonymity is stressed in all aspects of the program for the protection of members and their loved ones; for this reason, first names only are used.

By following FA's Twelve Step program of recovery—which includes basic readings, discussion of FA-approved literature, and sharing of experiences—members find a way to put their lives back together and achieve some sense of serenity.

Over time, the changes they make in themselves, and the new ways they interact within their families, can exert a positive impact on their family dynamics, most likely benefitting even their addicted loved ones.

How Can FA and Professionals Cooperate?

People suffering the effects of a loved one's addiction often turn to the professionals in their lives for guidance about what to do or where to get help.

Countless professionals from all walks of life have made referrals to FA throughout the half century since its inception.

Many professionals also turn to FA for their own personal healing. They attend FA meetings regularly as lay members, leaving their jobs outside the meeting room door. In FA, everyone is equal and anonymous. By maintaining each other's anonymity (for example by not divulging last names or other personal details, such as where members reside or what they do for a living), FA groups are able to keep "principles above personalities."

And some professionals go even further, by starting additional FA groups. Once a group is up-and-running, the professional steps aside so that all the group's members can have a role in managing its meetings in accordance with FA's Twelve Traditions, which require autonomy, anonymity, rotation of leaders, and no other affiliation.

Clergy

As you counsel the parents, other relatives, and friends of people suffering from substance abuse, you most assuredly encounter their questions of doubt, denial, low self-worth, and faltering religious beliefs. We invite you to let FA help you help them.

FA is a spiritual program. Its message is one of self-help facilitated by group interaction. FA meetings are open to everyone, regardless of religious belief or affiliation (or the lack of either).

In FA there is a common thread that binds all its members: everyone is dealing with similar problems of substance abuse in their families. Members understand each other's suffering. In the safe, nonjudgmental space of their meetings, they can share their experiences (challenges, hopes, successes, setbacks) in an open, honest way: learning from each other; gaining support from each other; taking from the meeting what they can use and leaving the rest behind.

Members learn to differentiate between what they can change (themselves) and what they cannot change (other people). They let go of the past, stop obsessing over the future, and focus on living today. They learn better ways to handle problems caused by their substance-abusing loved ones, such as listening and responding rather than tuning out and simply reacting. They identify and resolve their own negative self-perceptions and become more serene, peaceful, and accepting of reality. This, in turn, for many people, can rekindle a dormant interest in their religious beliefs, despite the persistence of unsolved problems.

Our Invitation to You

We invite you to learn more about Families Anonymous by visiting our website or contacting our World Service Office (see information below).

- Find meetings that exist in your community and beyond. Get help in starting new ones.
- Discover a wealth of recovery literature, some of it available for free download.
- Look through recent and past issues of FA's newsletter, Serenity Messenger (previously The Twelve Step Rag), and read testimonials and personal stories written by FA members who tell how the program has changed their lives and put them on a path toward recovery and serenity.
